EXPERIENCE

Senior Consultant   ThoughtWorks   Feb. 2006-Present

I Worked as a programmer on a 20+ developer Agile project for a well known e-commerce site. The application had complex integration requirements, high traffic and performance needs, and as usual the deadline was ultra tight. Technologies included Spring MVC and Mule ESB.

I Worked as a developer on a frontend equipment leasing application for a well known manufacturer. The project was a 10+ year old EJB application running on Weblogic. With nearly 6000 class files it would even make someone who wrote the book on legacy code (Michael Feathers) get sweaty armpits. Add to that equation the fact that the domain of leasing is particularly challenging and you get the picture. This project was a bear.

As part of a smaller Agile team for Inveneo (a nonprofit startup TW did pro bono work for) I was tech lead in charge of delivering a build and test system for Ubuntu installer ISOs. This is the best project I've even been on just because the software was going to help bring technology to remote places in Africa.

Another small Agile team I worked on delivered a reporting tool at an investment bank in London. This was a small piece of a much larger programme that was subsequently cancelled due to a very difficult political situation within the company. Even with the premature end of the project we delivered working software to the client. Thanks XP!
